Fall

University of Delaware SLS, September 15 – (15-20 delegates)

Although the SLS was quite small the students took great interest in the activities and the presentation given by John Thackrah. The ASME tools section of the meeting is extremely tough to get through without losing students attention. It was also put towards the end of the day, which helped emphasize the lack of interest from the delegates. (Agenda Attached)

Worcester Polytechnic Institute/Norton St. Gobain SLS, October 6 – (35-40 delegates)

Held by a member of industry, Norton St. Gobain, the SLS in Worcester gave the delegates an interactive experience that was shown through enthusiastic participation. The students had a chance to meet other section members while enacting skits dealing with problems such as recruitment, funding, etc. (Agenda Attached)

The two SLSs this fall in district three were both informative and covered approximately the same material. However, at Worcester the material had a better flow and additional interactivity for the delegates. One thing I would point out for future events, no matter what size, a meeting of that length cannot take place in the same room. At Univ. of DE, we had breaks and lunch in the same room. At the end of the day everyone could not wait to leave. At Norton St. Gobain lunch was located in a different room, and the skits allowed less sitting time.
